"Our Members' Voices"

Vol. 9 January, 2016 No. 5

Next Meeting: January 2nd, 1:00!

The year is a blank page.

With what will you fill it?
This year is drawing to a close and our membership is now 64. I welcome Michael Rains returning to our club with his new young adult book. If you were not at the Book Faire ask these ten members about their books: Nance Crawford, Paula Diggs, Doug Douglas, Lori Hamilton, Sherry Harris, Nan Hunt, Leslie Kaplan, Ray Malus, Ilan Sendowsky, and Michael Rains. Janna Orkney was ill and could not participate, but she too is a recently published author. Congratulations to all.

On December 5th our Book Faire at Crown Books went well. Thank you to all of the members who helped set up the area and supported our participating authors. Although I was disappointed there weren’t throngs of eager buyers, I learned a lot. For our new members, holding this event outside the Motion Picture Television Fund campus was an effort to expand our access to the reading public.

The above ten recently published authors displayed, pitched and sold their books to our supportive members and nearby public. One young child asked if anyone was famous. One parent bent down and whispered, “See, they are real authors. They write books like the ones here in the store.” Yes, they write the kind of books that are held in their hands, that their parents read, that reside on their shelves by color, size, subject, or author. The children were

Anne Perry —
“To Outline or Not to Outline – That is the Question.”
Rita Keeley Brown

We are very fortunate to have Anne Perry as our speaker for our CWC-SFV meeting on Saturday, January 2nd. Anne is in demand internationally as an author, teacher, and speaker. She has written three award-winning mystery series, several novels, and a series of Christmas novellas. With over eighty books published none have ever gone out of print. She is continually on the New York Times Bestseller List and was selected by the London Times as one of the twentieth century’s Masters of Crime.

The title of her presentation for our group is, “To Outline or Not to Outline – That is the Question.” Anne will share ‘ways to do it, and some of the advantages, and the fun, offsetting your thoughts in order, on paper, and realizing new possibilities in your story, essay, poem, or whatever you are working on.’

Those of you familiar with her writing are already aware of her masterful weaving of details into scenes, characterizations, societal mores, and plot in such a way that the reader is ‘in the shoes’ of the characters early on and totally involved throughout the story. She could be the poster child for ‘show, don’t tell.’ You will not find unnecessary words clogging up her writing. A Chicago Sun-Times review stated: “A Triumph…A model of the richness and subtleties of relationships, characters, and story construction.” She is also recognized for her expertise on the Victorian era in which most of her stories are set. Born in London, Anne has lived in Australia, Africa, and Scotland and recently moved to the U.S. settling here in Los Angeles.

I’m sure you will be as anxious as I am to hear from this masterful writer just how she develops and accomplishes such superb results. She places great importance on her method of outlining that keeps her writing on track. I think we will all learn a great deal from Anne.

The Gala Book Faire
Ray Malus

The fifth of December, you should have been there! Our fabled, biennial, Gala Book Faire. This year, the location was just a bit odd: A bookstore: Crown Books, Woodland Hills Promenade.

The board got there early to ready the scene: Long tables with name-signs all decked out in green. A Banner hung proudly for folks who were new. We hoped we’d get hundreds. (Well, …we got a few.)

So, Sylvia, Mary, Ray, Andi, Nance, Bob, and Sami festooned all the tables. Great job! And while all our officers readied the place, exhibitors wrangled and jockeyed for space.

We’d Paula and Leslie and Lori and Ray, (Oh, Erica showed up, but she didn’t stay.) with Nance, Doug, and Ilan, and Sherri, and Nan. (And Michael arrived late — just as we began.)

“So what should I charge? How do I calculate?” “Crown Books gets two tenths, point-oh-nine to the State.” “God help me! My algebra skills are a mess?” “Hey, you’re the ‘Retailer’. You’ll just have to guess!”

The hours crawled slowly. The traffic was thin. It seemed like The Book Faire would never begin. With hundreds of flyers spread all over town, It’s hard to believe so few showed up at Crown.

A handful of members dropped by for a look. And one or two actually purchased a book. We love that they joined us. They brightened the day. It’s nice that ‘the crowds’ didn’t scare them away.

So, after a while, when the hordes didn’t show, we packed up our books and got ready to go. We stowed our receipt pads, said “Thank you” to Sue, collected our placards, and bid sad adieu.

The fifth of December, you should have been there! Well, SOMEBODY should have! The Gala Book Faire.

On November 1, 2015 the Writing/Publishing world lost one of its giants. Dan Poynter, author of over 130 books, and the acknowledged Guru of Self-Publishing, passed away at the age of 77.

I needed to get my calculator out to check his age; on the two occasions I met him he seemed decades younger.

Dan was a magnetic, buoyant, and expert speaker. San Fernando Valley Branch was fortunate to have him appear twice (January, 2010 and June 2013). On those two occasions, I ran ‘tech’ for him. He was as charming off stage as he was on — full of knowledge and ebullience. Dan was a joy to listen to and to interact with. He was hugely generous with both his knowledge and his time.

We had tried to book him for another appearance, this year, but he’d injured himself, and was not available.

He leaves a priceless legacy at his website: http://www.parapublishing.com/sites/para/.

Many eulogies will be written about Dan. I am not qualified to write one. I simply know he changed the course of many of our members’ careers — mine included.

Dan Poynter will be greatly missed and fondly remembered.

(“-30-” is traditional journalistic shorthand for “end of story.” I think Dan would have approved.)

(From his website) “Dan’s Celebration of Life will be held on January 15th 2016, at 2:00 PM, at 199 Winchester Canyon Road, Goleta, California 93117” awed. And I saw the future, sparse but eager. That afternoon we also met a few people who were interested in joining our club, and our authors met an agent.

We learned about what each other wrote and met Sue Beil, the assistant manager of Crown Books. With Sue’s leadership Crown Books supports local authors and provides opportunities for our book promotions. She heard ideas for new books, gave advice about what sells, encouraged authors and helped every way she could. Thank you Sue. Our board will debrief on December 14th and pass on our experience and ideas to the next president for a successful 2017 Book Faire.

Looking to the future, I wish you all a growing, learning, loving, caring, and yes a writing new year. Maybe it will start with a glorious rainy day. The calendar of speakers for 2016 will be posted on our website and announced as soon I complete the selection. It will feature speakers on the art and craft of writing and editing. In the meantime I wish everyone Happy Holidays. I hope to see you on January 2nd for our featured speaker, the international best-selling author, Anne Perry.

Your President, Andi Polk

The Sentence

The sentence is the basic unit of thought. The Victorians liked them long and smoky. Our English teachers taught us to write sentences like them. In today’s world, however, the professionals like their sentences simple and clear.

Simple, not Short

The simple sentence is the most popular sentence among professional writers. But simple doesn’t necessarily mean short. It means one subject and one predicate (verb).

The following is a simple sentence: The explorers moved on.

But so is this: Their food and water depleted, hampered by the lack of oxygen in the cave, the explorers, fearless and dedicated to their mission, moved on into the darkness.

The Loose Sentence

The last example in the previous section above could be revised into a “loose” sentence, wherein the subject explorers and the predicate moved lead off:

The explorers moved off into the darkness, out of food and water, hampered by the lack of oxygen in the cave, but fearless and dedicated nevertheless.

The Periodic Sentence

The example above could also be written as a “periodic” sentence, wherein the subject and the predicate end the sentence.

Fearless and dedicated, out of food and water, and hampered by the lack of oxygen in the cave, the explorers moved off into the darkness.

The Cumulative Sentence

Both explorer sentences above are “cumulative,” that is, they are simple sentences expanded by the use of various word-clusters. Each cluster is separated by a comma. None contain a subject/predicate combination.

Tarzan stood on the cliff. (no clusters)
Tarzan stood on the cliff, dagger in his hand. (simple sentence, one cluster)
Tarzan stood on the cliff, dagger in his hand, steely-eyed and defiant. (two clusters)
Tarzan stood on the cliff, dagger in his hand, steely-eyed and defiant, his faithful chimp Cheeta at his side. (etc.)
Tarzan stood on the cliff, dagger in his hand, steely-eyed and defiant, his faithful chimp Cheeta at his side, his loin-skin flapping in the morning breeze.

The Wasted Sentence

Good writers try not to waste sentences. That is, they combine smaller elements into longer ones.

In the combination The chairman congratulated us upon hearing the good news. His name was Theo Wallington, the second sentence is wasted. It would be better combined with the previous one: Theo Wallington, the chairman, congratulated us upon hearing the good news.

A sentence beginning with “It is” can usually be better combined with another.

His home rests in the Loire Valley. It is on a beautiful fifteen acre wine orchard.

(combined) His home rests on a beautiful, fifteen acre wine orchard in the Loire Valley. □
A Heart-felt Thank You.

After many years as a proof-reader for this publication, Ethel Ann Shaffer has decided to retire.

Ethel Ann has been an invaluable asset to The Scribe. Her dedication, accuracy, and personality leave a vacancy that can never be completely filled. On behalf of all our members, and the staff of The Valley Scribe, I offer her our deep thanks for her years of service.

Ethel Ann's retirement creates a opening on our staff, that of proofreader.
The requirements for this job are speed, accuracy, and — most of all — tolerance.
I have written several times: “As editor, I feel it is our job to insure that published pieces are within certain guidelines of punctuation, grammar, spelling, formatting, layout, and... — well that’s about it. Content is mostly your affair. Your name is on the piece. We assume you carefully think out the ideas you express, the words and phrases you choose. We will try never to change these.”
I have also said many times, I do not always agree with, or even like, everything we print. That is not a valid concern. You each have your own voice, and we will not change it. We want to print what you write, not what we think you should write.
So, if you feel you would like to help, can respond quickly, have a good ‘eye’ a sound grounding in ordinary English spelling, and usage, and can adopt these guidelines, we would love to have you on staff.
Please contact me. -=r=-

Life’s Changing Journey
Lillian Rodich

life like a carousel turns and turns the landscape spins by blurred in detail

still music surrounds us remains bright and tinsel we can hear it in our memories lyrics to old songs long ago feelings reawakened mystic figures come into focus and smile into our everyday lives life’s carousel journey continues unfamiliar places come into view rhythms and melodies change new words tumble into old songs new friends wave their untold stories old friends appear brightly and forever and the horses gallop on

Wonders In Our Lives
Norman Molesko

Every footstep that we take, every leg movement that we make,
represent many complex reflexes from a neuromuscular standpoint.
What goes on with our body parts is taken for granted by most.
Other examples can include:
nodding one’s head,
wigging one ear,
raising either arm,
lowering one’s butt,
lifting one’s big toe.
All of these are truly wonders to appreciate and to behold and not to be taken for granted.
Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Ray Malus

Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Distant wraiths that haunt the morning subway, loose leaf books, pressed hard and tight against their lush and unfamiliar ripened breasts, are gripped like stiffened lovers they desire.

Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Banished girdles stuffed in canvas book bags.
Tickling whiffs of latex, musk and talcum.
Luscious aspic haunches free to taunt and chuckle in felt skirts — stretched taut on softly rounded bellies — creased with tension, draped like theater curtains poised for a performance.

Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Bra-strap-hanging, seat awaiting, standing swaying, with enticing legs akimbo flexed for balance, intimating passion.
Muscledd calves in sheer black leotards that hint of willing whipped-cream thighs imprisoned, smothering in cruel restraining fabric.

Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Black ironed hair and long pale equine faces.
Tragic eyes sunk deep in inky shadow hopeless, gaze with gravitas and sorrow search for meaning through the grimy windows, seek eternal truths beneath their slippers.

Hunter College Girls in Nineteen-Sixty
Dark Medeas steeped in lamentation.
Draped in velvet adolescent heartache,
Clothed in coffee-house-bleak devastation.
Reach to you, with husky hungry voices, offer dreams in stiff and hard-bound cardboard, eager, pleading, “Will you read my poems?”

Untitled
Sylvia Molesko

Oh me, oh my,
How time does fly!
So much to do,
I’ll never get through.
My head it spins,
I wish I were twins.

Have you ever felt
That you’re doing too much,
And never enough gets done?
Making a list doesn’t seem to help,
And you’ve not got time for fun?

So you go go go,
But you know, no no.
You really should stop,
Before you drop.

Well don’t be stressed,
It’s time for a rest
And relaxation too.
You can never do enough,
You know it’s true,
For you, yourself - for you.

So have some cheer,
It’s a brand New Year.
Two thousand sixteen
Can be a year serene.
It’s really up to you!

If you have reservations,
About how your time goes,
Make New Year’s resolutions to write poetry or prose.
Meetings are held at 1:00 p.m. on the 1st Saturday of every month.
